Anthony Kim

As founder and CEO of Education Elements, he has helped hundreds of schools and districts change the way they think about teaching and learning. He has contributed to many publications on new school models including, "Lessons Learned from Blended Programs: Experiences and Recommendations from the Field."

Anthony is a nationally recognized speaker on Personalized Learning and his work has been referenced by the Christensen Institute, INACOL, EdSurge, CompetencyWorks, EdWeek, District Administrator and numerous other research reports.

Christian Moore

Christian grew up in a blended family of twelve children, spending most of his childhood years on the streets outside Washington D.C. where he was exposed to a wide array of social problems. Due to his poor grades and learning disabilities, high school counselors informed Christian that college was not a viable option.

After graduation, an experience volunteering in the inner city gave him a drive to help others and reason to try. He found his passion in social work. After working in education, youth corrections and a homeless program, Christian created the "Why Try" approach in reaching out to today's youth.
